Rizal completes the Noli Me Tangere

The Execution of Rizal

Inauguration of Quezon

The Leyte Landing
Jose Rizal wrote the Noli Me Tangere as he was travelling through Europe. He finished the manuscript before midnight on February 21, 1887 while in Berlin.
When Rizal was executed in Luneta, he was denied the dignity of facing the firing squad. To add further insult, the Spaniards selected a Filipino troop to do the deed. Behind the Filipinos were Spanish soldiers, ready to shoot if the former refused carry out orders.
Manuel L. Quezon and Sergio Osmeña Sr. took their oaths as president and vice president of the Commonwealth of the Philippines on November 15, 1935. They were sworn in by Ramon Avanceña, chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippines on the steps of the former Legislative Building, now the National Museum of Fine Arts.
Diorama 59: The Leyte Landing

The weak defenses of the Japanese forces in the Visayas led MacArthur to pin Leyte as the site for the return of the American forces to the Philippines. On the morning of October 20, 1944, General Douglas MacArthur and President Sergio Osmeña waded ashore the Red Beach in Palo, Leyte, signaling the return of the legitimate government.
